Following the success of last year's inaugural event, The Push's Music Careers Expo is back for another year – this time across two locations in Adelaide on Wednesday 22 June and Melbourne on Wednesday 29 June.

This free, one-day event provides young people with insights and information on how to get a start in the Australian music industry.

Featuring keynote presentations, workshops, panel discussions and more, the Music Careers Expo is a fun and interactive way for young people to learn about the various professions within the music industry and meet one-on-one with education and training providers to receive some tailored advice.

If you have a passion for Australian music and are keen to pursue a career in the industry, this is for you. More details about presenters, workshops and other event activities will be announced soon.

"We are super excited to be bringing the Music Careers Expo back for a second year – this time in both Melbourne and Adelaide. We know that the last two years have a significant impact on young people entering our contemporary music sector and encourage any young people that are interested in music to attend and deepen their understanding of the various pathways and opportunities that exist."

– Kate Duncan, CEO, The Push

"The South Australian Government, through the Department for Innovation and Skills' Music Development Office and the Department for Education, is pleased to support the delivery of the first edition of the music careers expo here in South Australia. Thanks to the partnership between The Push and Northern Sound System, this careers expo is set to showcase all of the available pathways and careers available to young South Australians interested in embarking on a career in the Australian music industry."

– South Australian Minister for Arts, Andrea Michaels.
